In about half-an-hour, A Voice For Men will be hosting a call-in radio show about the "myth" that bronies are creepy weirdos. We're all going to call in and pretend to be a bunch of autistic pony fuckers.

Phone Number: (310) 388-9709

You should tell them that you want to address an uncomfortable but very real aspect of the mlp fandom, which is the fact that there is a large percentage of viewers (both male and female) who are sexually attracted to the characters, and to classify this as a simple feminism/MRA issue is being disingenuous to the reality of the show's popularity

This show in general has amazingly sperg call-ins. Last time I listened they were discussing 'Men going their own way,' which I gave the benefit if the doubt too and assumed would be men who remain single out not desiring a relationship. Sort of an Aromantic/Asexual angle opposing the obsession with relationships. Turns out it was a bunch of women-hating guys whining about how they've quit relationships and going on semi-coherent rants. It's weird, the first two hours seem to be quite intelligent and well thought out, and then it just collapses into itself as the types who actually listen to MRA radio stations enough to call in begin to show up

I do watch detailed anime. I watched GITSAC2NDGIG right before MLP, and I was watching Fate Zero while working my way through it.

MLP just offers something that the other shows I watch don't.

World building and character development are very interesting to me, and in some ways there is a hell of a lot of potential in the MLP:FiM setting to let that fanon engine have space to run.
